‘Let’s Sing Together’

was a local project aimed at people with disabilities, focusing on fostering musical passions, promoting inclusion and preventing social isolation. The participants took part in vocal workshops led by an instructor, as well as sessions teaching singing techniques, song interpretation and group collaboration.

The project culminated in an open concert for the local community, during which the participants performed the repertoire they had prepared. The event promoted social agency, served as an example of diversity and built bonds between the participants and local residents.
